REPORT

Date November 16, 1935.

Subject..... Manchukuo Office at No. 23 Minghong Road and private ..... telephone system at 363 Boone Road.

Made by..... and..... Forwarded by..... C.D.I. Grubb

Enquiries made regarding the report that a private telephone system belonging to a Japanese, which has eighteen different lines, is installed at 363 Boone Road, show that this number is allotted to a cigarette and exchange shop situated at the entrance to an alleyway and owned by a Chinese. The next number, 365, is a clock and gramophone shop owned by a Japanese. An inspection of these premises from the outside failed to disclose any sign of a number of telephone lines

Regarding the establishment of an office for Manchukuo affairs at No. 23 Minghong Road, the portion of the building to which this number is allotted is used as a wharf office by the N.Y.K. This building, which faces Yangtze Road, extends from Minghong to Woochang Roads. A part of it numbered 1 Yangtze Road, is used as Japanese Consular offices and the building seems quite a likely place for an office wherein affairs pertaining to Manchukuo would be dealt with.

The Japanese Consulate, the rear part of which is situated on the corner of Woochang and Yangtze Roads, and the building referred to are always guarded by Consular Police, therefore no attempt was made to pursue investigations inside the premises.

REPORT

Date July 19 1935.

Subject Organization of a Group named "The Grand Federation of China, Manchukuo and Japan".

Made by and Forwarded by C.D.I. Grubb

No confirmation can be obtained of the report that a China-Japan-Manchukuo League is in existence in Shanghai with offices in Boone Road and that one named Liu Yau-ting (刘耀廷) is the head of the group.

Liu Yau-ting alias Liu Ngh-dz (刘玉德), age about 40, is a native of Weihaiwei and at present resides at Lane 117, No. 12 Ping Liang Tsung, Pingliang Road. According to inquiries made he was formerly a grocer in Vladivostock, but returned to China following the outbreak of the Soviet Revolution.

Some seven years ago he came to Shanghai and stayed at the home of one of his fellow countryman named Liang Tsing-teh (梁贇德) who was at that time an interpreter in the Kung Dah Cotton Mill. Subsequently he established a glove and ribbon factory at his present address, employing some 10 workers. He speaks the Russian language but cannot speak Japanese, although he has many acquaintances among seamen aboard various Japanese steamers, mostly fellow countrymen. Through these friends he has carried on the smuggling of radio parts from Japan to China, from which he has made considerable profit.

The three Chinese named Mao Shao-Ching (马少卿), Wang King-loong (王金龍) and Wang King-pao (王金宝), stated to be the Japanese representatives sent to Shanghai to organize the group, cannot be located.
